APPENDIX TO ARMY ORDER 384.

APPENDIX XII.

MEMORANDUM ON THE CARE AND USE OF ROPE AND ROPE SLINGS MADE FROM ITALIAN HEMP.

1. A complete record of all rope and rope slings should be kept by those responsible for their use and custody. Pegs should, if possible, be arranged in the storehouse or building in which they are kept, and a place allotted to each, with a board upon which should be recorded—

A description of the rope, its age, when recovered, when last tested, its safe working load, and the kind of heavy work to which it has since been subjected.

2. All responsible persons who in the course of their duties require to use ropes and rope slings for lifting eavy weights should first carefully examine them, and by periodical or frequent test satisfy themselves as to weights should have several and a several seve

the gun or other article used for the test. In any case in which it may be considered desirable, application not be made to have ropes and rope slings tested at Woolwich.

4. No rope or sling should be used to lift any greater weight than its tabulated safety strain.

5. Slings should be so adjusted that the splice is not round any edges or corners or over the lifting hook most cases it is considered best for the splice to be between the lifting hook and the load. The sling should be left to adjust itself, but should be so arranged before lifting that the strain may be immediately equal throughout; and all jerking should be avoided.

6. Heavy articles with edges, projections, or corners, should be carefully padded with old sacking or suita pieces of wood to prevent damage to the rope.

7. Steadying ropes should be securely attached and used to gently regulate the position of the load, will iting out of the perpendicular, and to prevent surging or swinging.

8. Ropes and rope slings of a heavy nature which may be found unfit for the work for which they are required to be condemned on that account alone, but should be utilised, if possible, for work of a lighter not where there is no risk of danger, and where the larger size would not be likely to be detrimental to the work hand.

9. The limit of safety in the accompanying table is based upon the average breaking strain, the testing which, it should be remembered, has been carried out under the most favourable circumstances, the rope have been secured to a machine without contact with edges or corners, and the strain applied steadily and frest jerk or adjustment. Ropes and alings in daily use cannot always escape these, but it is considered that dan and accident may to a very great extent be avoided by an acquaintance with and careful observance of the k going instructions, and with the help of the following table. Considerable discretion must of course still exercised in the use of part-worn rope and slings, so much depends on age and treatment.
